

Gentlemen,

I am always concerned when power is too easily concentrated in a single business entity, particularly the power of broadcasting which is licensed to business operators by the Federal Communications Commission.

As we airlift jobs by the thousands to third world economies, consolidate hundreds upon hundreds of family farms into conglom-farms, and roll out the red carpet for the likes of Clear Channel and other media conglomerates who give us less choice, less diversity, and pre-programmed corporate paly-lists, don't you think it is time to start to question this trend and open the air-waves to choice, to different and challenging points of view, and to voices that represent voters, constituents, and jurisdictions other than those of the fat-cat interest grouips and lobbyists?
